Answer: Plato concludes that a belief can only be considered knowledge if it is justified and true. For example, if you believe the fastest way home is by highway because you've tested it and it's true, that's knowledge. If it isn't true or you haven't tested it (i.e., no justification), then it isn't knowledge.

This has been explained a little by myself in Philosophy 101 (philpapers induced) #2 - Abstract objects: Platonism or nominalism. Plato believed there was an extra realm where abstract ideas and universals existed. These days, this is less adhered to, and yet many are still realists believing that these abstracta are really real, in some way.
